PRETTY GIRL AIDS
TO UNCOVER PLOT
FOR WAR IN MEXICO

Buenos Ayres, July 17.—A beautiful young American woman played a highly important part in the uncovering of the German plot to involve Mexico and Japan in a war against the United States, as revealed by the Zimmerman letter two years ago, the newspaper La Nacion declares.

La Nacion asserts that it received full information of how the United States secret service obtained copies of letters relating to the conspiracy from a man who was until recently in the American consul service. He was a trusted agent of the American state department, the newspaper declares, and trailed German agents acting as intermediaries between Foreign Secretary Zimmerman, in Berlin, and the German minister to Mexico, von Eckhardt.

According to La Nacion, the United States secret service first picked up the trail of a German agent, who was acting as intermediary and finally brought about his arrest in New York. After he had been interned on Ellis Island, Ambassador Bernstorff obtained the services of a pretty young German girl, who was to go to Mexico City on a Dutch passport. Obviously as a tourist, but in reality as the carrier of important confidential information to von Eckhardt regarding the German plot against the United States.

The girl, who stopped at Laredo, Tex., La Nacion asserts. The state department let the word broadcast that she had merely been refused entrance into Mexico on the ground that it was dangerous for women to enter the country and that she had been set at liberty.

As a matter of fact, says La Nacion, she was held incommunicado and other young women who were married, was given the German girl agents credentials and proceeded to Mexico City. There she represented herself to be the emissary from Bernstorff and was employed as confidential secretary by the German minister. It was while acting in this role that she obtained possession of the documents that were subsequently given publication from Washington, creating a world-wide sensation.

Correspondence seized by agents of the state department in 1917, just before the U. S. entered the war, revealed the existence of a German plot to overthrow the U. S. in difficulties with Japan and Mexico. The correspondence consisted of letter from Zimmerman, then foreign secretary in the German cabinet, to von Eckhardt, the German minister to Mexico, who was to sound the Mexican government on the scheme.

STREET RAILWAY
OFFICIALS TESTIFY

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS]

Washington, July 17.—W. D. George, receiver of the Pittsburgh traction properties, and M. D. Brush, former president of the Boston Elevated lines were witnesses at today's session of the federal railway commission appointed by President Wilson to inquire into the conditions of and to suggest relief for the street railway systems of the country. Hearings were begun here several days ago. Both witnesses testified that increased fares had been resorted to in their respective cities in an effort to relieve the company's financial embarrassments, but without success.

The Pittsburgh company has been in the hands of receivers for some time and it was announced that August 1, fares there will go to 10 cents. Mortimer E. Cooley, dean of the University of Michigan, and other university men, cost of maintenance and renewals, also testified.

The commission announced at the close of its hearing last night that after the completion of the case, adjournment would be taken until August 4. Secretary Baker and several economists then will be heard. Following the testimony of the witnesses, the majority of the largest cities in the country and representatives of various committees will be heard.

Synopsis of Weather
During Past Week

Milwaukee, July 16.—Synopsis of weather and crop conditions in Wisconsin for the week ending Tuesday, July 15:

Dry weather with nearly normal temperatures prevailed during the first part of the week, followed on the 13th and 14th by heavy rains and cooler weather over the state. Haying progressed favorably, much of the crop being safely stored. The cutting of rye, barley, and winter wheat was carried on with but slight interruptions until the heavy showers caused a temporary lull in operations. Considerable rust has developed on barley and oats and frequent complaints are heard of small grains heading short, but as a whole the small grains are very good to excellent. The hay crop is one of the largest in years. Corn has made remarkably rapid growth and promises to be an exceptionally large crop. Fruits are generally very good, except apples which are light. Potatoes are growing well, potato bugs, did considerable damage, but are now generally under control; the leaf hopper which caused considerable alarm has as yet injured the crop only in a few localities. Early potatoes are on the market. Tobacco, sugar beets, field peas, tomatoes, cucumbers, cabbages, etc., are in general very good to excellent.

WAR RISK INSURANCE.

Characterizing the war risk insurance law "the most generous piece of legislation ever written on the statute books of a grateful nation," Congressman Clifford E. Randall urges that all veterans of the world war should bear in mind that this insurance law was enacted for their benefit. He issues the following statement to aid soldiers, sailors and mariners in understanding their insurance policies.

"As only those who have served in active duty during the recent emergency are entitled to hold war risk insurance, I feel it is for your own best interest to hold on to your government insurance; to keep up your premium payments. Don't fall behind. Or, if you have permitted your insurance to lapse or even if you have finally cancelled it, to hasten to re-instate it under the new and liberal provisions for reinstatement."

"Probably you can never get insurance again at so low a rate or with so many favorable provisions for your benefit. You should have a special pride in displaying good business sense by taking the utmost advantage of this—your own special and exclusive privilege—made available for you in recognition of your patriotic service. Your government insurance policy is more than a policy; it is a certificate of honor."

"The important thing now is for you to keep your war-time insurance. You can convert it into other forms of government insurance at your own convenience within five years, but it is necessary that you have your war insurance in force at the time you make application for one of the new forms of insurance. The only way you can do this is by keeping up your premium payments, which are much lower than the rates charged for the most nearly similar policies by private companies, which are unable to offer the special advantages which the government has offered."

"It is your plain duty, not only to yourself, but to your loved ones—both those you have now, and those you may have in the future—to keep all of your insurance if possible."

"If you can't keep all of it, keep at least part of it. You can reduce it if you have to."

"Even if you are without dependents, your government policy is just as valuable to you. You can convert to a government endowment policy which will assure financial comfort in later years."

"It is important to you to know that all policies issued by the government contain a total disability clause, making them payable at any time you may become totally and permanently disabled, regardless of your age."

"Another advantage of government policies is that a service man, after his return to civil life, may engage in any occupation, no matter how hazardous, including military service, or may travel anywhere, without affecting his insurance, provided he keeps his premiums paid."

"No physical or medical examination is necessary for the conversion of policies. Physical examination would be necessary before you could obtain insurance from any other source."

"Your government insurance is protected from the claims of creditors. Your insurance money cannot be taken away from you (or later from your beneficiary) for payment of your debts or your beneficiary's. This is a most important provision, which insures your insurance."

"Neither you nor your beneficiary ever will have to pay a cent of taxes to the government on the proceeds of your government insurance."

"You may pay your premiums by the month without having to pay anything extra on account of the additional expense to the government of collecting monthly premiums. Or, if you prefer, you may pay quarterly, semi-annually or annually. The government pays all the expenses of running the business."

"The 'cash value' of a new government policy is the amount the government gives you if you choose to give up your insurance. The 'cash value' means that you can borrow money on your policy up to 94% of the cash value."

"If your term insurance (wartime insurance) has lapsed, I plead with you to pay up back premiums and make application for reinstatement at once. Don't put it off."

"Remember that the poorhouses and similar institutions are full of people who 'took a chance' by going without insurance."

"Death and disability come to the most hale and hearty without warning. They strike down men when insurance is impossible—when it is too late!"

"Never forget that one of the most valuable features of a government insurance policy is that it provides for the disability of the holder, as well as for his death."

"Reinstatement of lapsed war risk insurance is allowed up to nine months from first date of lapse under the provisions of an exceedingly important and liberal ruling made by the treasury department, May 17, 1919, extending the reinstatement privileges after separation of the insured from the active military or naval service."

If you wish to write to Congressman Randall personally for advice or information about your government insurance, he will give inquiries personal attention.

SEND YOUR NAME.

We have often explained in these columns that we would not publish communications submitted to us that did not disclose the identity of the writer. It is obvious that some of our readers do not understand, for frequently we receive letters for the "Voice of the People" column unsigned and with nothing to indicate from whom they are received.

It is not necessary that the real name of the writer be published, but it is necessary that we have the name and address of the sender on file.

We take this position because we feel it is unfair for one person to criticize another or any institution unless we know who is making the criticism.

Many meritorious articles have been consigned to the waste basket because the writers have not followed the rule laid down concerning their presentation.

It looks as if President Wilson was "jess foolin'" when he declared that the peace treaty would have to stand without reservations. His S. O. S. wiggled at republican senators as well as belligerents in his own party indicates that he sees the futility of stubbornly bucking public sentiment as represented in the United States senate.

WHO'S WHO in the Daily News

GEN. TASKER H. BLISS.
In recent debates in the senate the statement has been made that Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, one of America's representatives at the peace conference, vigorously opposed the granting of Shantung to the Japanese, but was over-ruled by President Wilson. The facts in the case will no doubt be made clear soon.

As America's representative at the supreme war council since early in 1918, General Bliss has become a familiar figure to the statesmen and soldiers of the allies. Before going to Europe he had been successively assistant chief and chief of the American general staff in Washington. He is, of course, a professional soldier. But as his colleagues at Versailles have discovered, he is an experienced diplomat and administrator as well. After the Spanish war he took a leading part in the reconstruction of Cuba under the American military authorities. More recently he was military adviser to the American commissioners at a conference with representatives of Mexico, called to consider the relations between the United States and that unfortunate republic.

It is difficult to write a column on the day you are going from one suburb to another. Still moving with us is something like the negro down South. He puts out the fire and calls the dog.

JUST FOLKS

By EDGAR A. GUEST

A THOUGHT FOR FATHERS.

I want to have my youngsters glad that I was chosen for their dad. I want them when I've gone away to think of me at times and say that I bequeathed to them a name that never had been linked with shame.

I have no great desire for pelf or joys which I may reap myself. I shall not whimper through I miss the toposm peak of earthly bliss if I can be throughout my days a man my little ones can praise.

I want my children to be proud of me in any throng or crowd. I would not have them turn away or blush at aught that I might say. Or try to hide from public view a single deed that I may do.

When they are wiser, older grown, and all life's ways to them are known, I would not have them call to mind Occasion when I was unkind. Or have them in my record see One cause to be ashamed of me.

I want to leave my children here To walk through life without a fear. I want to have them proud to say They bear my name from day to day. I want them always to be glad That I was chosen for their dad.

I want to leave my children here To walk through life without a fear. I want to have them proud to say They bear my name from day to day. I want them always to be glad That I was chosen for their dad.

Heart and Home Problems

BY ELIZABETH THOMPSON
LETTERS MAY BE ADDRESSED TO MRS. THOMPSON, IN CARE OF THE GAZETTE

Dear Mrs. Thompson: You certainly put up with a great deal in your answer to me. I had the idea it was a noble streak in me that made me write as I did. I hate to see young girls, not much more than kids, making fools of themselves. I am not attracted by painted faces, even though I have flirted with fast girls. You said it right—I am contemptible.

I have no people, not one relative, save the wide world. I was just one of those doorstep offerings to a bigoted public and spent my childhood in an orphanage.

I was engaged to a girl back in another town about the only real girl I had ever known. Finally she cut me because she heard from "good authority" that I was fast. I was straight at that time, but could not make her believe it on account of my origin, I suppose. I cut the town as soon as I heard of her coming marriage to another. I felt that I would rather think she was happy than see it every day and know there was less chance of my seeing her while I was a long way off.

I thought if it might encourage you in your work to know it, then I ought to tell you. I am going to get lost from here soon. It will mean one less of my kind in the city and one more decent fellow in some other town. I hope. You may not know it, but it is just as tough to stay in the same place and try to reform, I am disgusted with myself.

Thank you for your part in the game.

Your letter has encouraged me. I haven't the slightest doubt about your reforming. Your ideals are good if you will live up to them. This little back-sitting does not hurt your character permanently.

I believe that the girl was not in love with you or she would have stuck to you regardless of what she heard.

When Annie and Bernard came home from their brief honeymoon Monday morning the city was drenched in rain. A cold, autumn soporific bedrugged everything. They had a bag and a suitcase and Bernie looked at my girl as he stepped out. Annie it seemed an unthinkable extravagance. Their flat was uptown. The fare would be some horrible figure impossible for her inexperience to calculate.

"Well, what'll we do, ruin our clothes and save a couple of dollars?" said Bernie frowningly.

"But we can take the crosstown and transfer to Eighth," hazarded Annie, surveying the running gutters, the rain-soaked sidewalks, the early and they had had no breakfast yet.

"And take an hour getting home? No, sir, we'll take a cab. Hey, he mentioned to a sleepy old cabman tolling in his seat in a "hansom."

"How much'll it cost to go to St. Nicholas avenue and a hundred and thirty-ninth?"

"The man squinted at the streaming street and brought his indifferent gaze back to the modest couple, who did not look particularly promising as to tips.

"Three and a quarter," said he.

"What!" exploded Bernie. Annie tugged his sleeve.

"Don't let's Bern. We can't afford it. Here's our coin."

"Oh, all right," Bernie was cross. Annie tried to distract him and bring back his good humor all the way uptown. But the car jerked and stopped and started and stopped again, and got blocked by the traffic and crawled and crawled, and Bernie was very impatient.

"They reached the flat finally. It thrilled Annie to the core when Bernie opened their door with the latch-key and strode into the little place that was their actual sweet, neat home. She turned impulsively to him and threw her arms about his neck.

"Oh, darling—it's OURS— isn't it wonderful?"

"Look out, I'm soaking wet," said Bernie, tossing his head. "Look at my coat—look at my shoes—there's a coffee in the house?"

"Yes, dear, Aunt Maggie saw it all that. The kitchen's stocked up with a lot of things. Oh, Bernie, you're inarticulate with emotions she couldn't have analyzed, stood clasping her hands and gazing round the little place that was now the world to her."

"Yeah," answered Bernie, vaguely. He was now in the bedroom getting off his wet collar and shoes. "Fix the breakfast in a hurry, will you, Mar. Two, to eat it to the office like anything. You don't have to go today. Tomorrow'll be plenty of time."

When Bernie had gone, Annie stood motionless by the door where he had left her, thinking. Why was there a tinge of disappointment about the homecoming? Why was not Bernie as enraptured as she with the room and the furniture and the first breakfast together and the delicious outlook of thousands of other breakfasts and dinners together in their cozy little home? She felt a little short of breath. Was she stupid to have insisted on the street car. Wasn't the coffee up to the mark? Or was it only that Bernie was wet and tired and in a hurry to get to the office? Annie had never read philosophies. She had never heard the saying, "Man's love leaves off where woman's love begins." She didn't know that it was in the nature of the male to relate most in the seat of comfort and to relapse abruptly from the realization of his passion into the commonplace of daily routine. At the end of the honeymoon man is apt to relate to himself at least, "Well, it's over." While woman smiles into the cozy face of the future with a "Well, it's just begun!"

SMART WRAP FOR THE MOTOR TRIP

As soon as darkness came, Jack and the guards from the castle started for the ruins at the top of the mountain.

You remember Jack had seen strange men using a secret passageway there.

When the party reached the tumble-down castle, the king said to Jack:

"You take the lead and show us just where you stood behind the old rusty suit of armor when you saw the secret door."

The king cautioned all of the men to be quiet and have their guns ready to shoot and then Jack led them to his hiding place. It was awfully dark in the cellar. Jack had to go slowly to avoid getting lost. The guards did not use lanterns for, of course, that would give them away.

Finally Jack found the old rusty suit of armor behind which he had hidden during the game of hide and seek. He showed them as near as he could where the robber had come from to open the door where it was, and just how it had swung open.

The king stationed the guards in hiding places near the scene and he and Jack tried to find the hidden spring which one of the robbers had pressed to open the door. They searched for several minutes, but couldn't find it. The king decided that the only thing to do was to sit down and wait for the robbers to open the door. Telling the guards to remain hidden, he and Jack sat down near Jack's hiding place and the wait for the robbers began.

Jack had often thought and dreamed of tracking robbers to their dens and always believed he would be very calm and patient while waiting for his victims to show up, but now he was so excited that he could hardly sit still. He thought, hours were slipping by, and that it must be close to morning.

It was really only about an hour though before voices were heard some distance away in the ruins.

Jack's heart fairly stopped beating. Pretty soon he and the king could see a light from a lantern at the farther end of the cellar. Then by the light of the lantern they could make out three men coming towards the hidden door. When they reached it, one of the men found what the king and Jack had failed to discover—the hidden spring and the door swung out.

As it opened up, the king called to his men, and they rushed in on the robbers. In an instant the three men who had sought to enter the hidden door and the door swung out. It was the king's order to swing shut during the brief scuffle. The three prisoners were securely bound and two men were left to guard them.

King Jack and the rest of the guards entered the passageway, determined to find out where it led.

SIDE TALKS

—By—
RUTH CAMERON

Are Hints Permissible?

I hate hints. I'd rather anyone asked me for a thing right out than to hint about it. It is something of a bromidium.

We have all said it and heard it said some dozens of times.

And yet, when you stop to think of it, don't hinting have its place in the world?

What is a hint? It is "a remote allusion, a suggestion or reminder without a full declaration."

Why Should You Deceive Them?

Suppose you live in the country. Suppose you know that some friends, who have a large machine, are going to town on a certain day. Suppose you are going to town on that day and you think in all probability they would be delighted to take you along only they do not know that you are going up that day. Is it not permissible to mention casually in the course of your general conversation something that you are going to do in town. If they want to take you along they will probably ask when you are going. If they are generous people you will probably give them pleasure to take you. Why should you deprive yourself and them by year fear of hinting?

Sometimes A Remote Allusion Is Less Awkward.

Of course the people who hate hints might say that it would be better to ask them outright if they cared to take you. I am not so sure. There might be certain reasons why they would not and that fact would be sufficiently conveyed if after discovering that you were going up they did not ask when. Wouldn't that be less awkward than obliging them to come out and tell you that it wasn't convenient to take you.

Of course it is not fair to drop such a hint and then to feel resentful if it is not taken up. One should respect one's friends' reasons even if they are not conveyed to one.

Perhaps The Old Pig Doesn't Like Hints.

Also hinting, deliberately and repeatedly to force people into either doing what you want or feeling uncomfortable is not a pretty habit. For instance, I heard a woman say "Her husband's office is right on the line of the parade and I hinted just as hard as I could that we didn't have any place to go, but she didn't pay any attention. The old pig."

Maybe "the old pig" was one of those innumerable people who don't like to be forcibly hinted into doing anything and will suffer in silence any when they find anyone is trying to do that.

I suspect that it all boils down to this: that the spirit in which a hint is made determines whether a hint is a disagreeable or a permissible thing.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

By ELOISE.

Motoring is being resumed with much gusto in the first after-the-war summer. The society columns are full of motor parties of young maids and matrons motoring through the country's lake districts or through the mountains. If one has plenty of time to go leisurely and enjoy the journey, there is really nothing more wonderful than a tour through the beautiful scenery in which our own country is so rich.

This very smart and altogether practical and comfortable wrap was designed especially for motoring. It is made of long, loose lines which render it practical to wear over suit and fluffy frocks. It is navy blue material of heavy appearance. In reality, however, it is rather light but very warm and comfortable. The deep wide cuffs and long stole collar are made of French blue knitted wool and loop fringe of the wool trims them. Some such wrap as this is an absolute necessity for motoring, clear and it may be said that this is one of the smartest seen in the shops this season. The coat is unlined, but the material is two-sided, blue on the no lining is necessary.

STOP AND LOOK

A man and a boy were walking down the street at a busy hour. They were Mr. Froons and his scholar, little Rollo.

"Teacher dear, why is that crowd of persons standing on that corner looking up at the sky?" asked little Rollo.

"Ah, Rollo. They are imbued with curiosity—that dreadful vice which I have warned you against. See? They are watching the man climb up the outside of that tall building."

And the teacher drew little Rollo over to the corner where they mingled with the breathless crowd.

After watching the human fly for a half hour, little Rollo asked:

"Mr. Froons, dear, why does the man climb up on the outside when he can go safely up on the inside?"

But Mr. Froons never heard, so interested was he in the thrilling scene. A half hour later, when the man reached the top, waved his hand and disappeared and the crowd dispersed, Mr. Froons and little Rollo were the last to go.

"After all, Rollo dear," said Mr. Froons, thoughtfully, "curiosity is not really a vice, you know. It is just a harmless seeking after knowledge. It is simply a matter of degree."

"Goodness," he exclaimed, looking up at the town clock. "It is time for your gymnasium lesson!"

And the two hurried back to the class-room.

The Magnificent Ambersons

By BOOTH TARKINGTON

Copyright by Doubleday, Page &amp; Co.

The fantastic moment passed, and even while it lasted he was doing his duty, greeting two pretty girls with whom he had grown up, as people say, and warmly assuring them that he remembered them very well—an assurance which might have surprised them "in anybody but George Amberson." It seemed unnecessary, since he had spent many hours with them no longer than the preceding August. They had with them their parents and an uncle from out of town; and George negligently gave the parent the same assurance he had given the daughters, but murmured another form of greeting to the out-of-town uncle, whom he had never seen before. This person George absently took note of as a "queer-looking duck." Undergraduates had not yet adopted "bird." It was a period previous to that in which a sophomore would have thought of the Sharon girls' uncle as a "queer-looking bird," or, perhaps, a "funny-face bird." In George's time every human male was to be deflected at pleasure as a "duck," but "duck" was not spoken with admiring affection, as in its former feminine use to signify a "dear"—on the contrary, "duck" implied the speaker's personal detachment and, humorous superiority. An indifferent amusement was what George felt when his mother, with a gentle emphasis, interrupted his interchange of courtesies with the nieces to present him to the queer-looking duck, their uncle. This emphasis of Isabel's, though slight, enabled George to perceive that she considered the queer-looking duck a person of some importance; but it was far from enabling him to understand why. The duck parted his thick and lustrous black hair on the side; his face was a forgetful-looking thing, and his coat, though it fitted a good-enough middle-aged figure, no product of this year, or of last year either. Observing only his unfashionable hair, his preoccupied face and his old coat, the Olympic George set him down as a queer-looking duck, and having thus completed his portrait took no interest in him.

The Sharon girls passed on, taking the queer-looking duck with them, and George became pink with mortification as his mother called his attention to a white-bearded guest waiting to shake his hand. This was George's great-uncle, old John Minifer. It was old John's boast that in spite of his connection by marriage with the Ambersons he never had worn and never would wear a swallowtail coat. Members of his family had exerted their influence uselessly—at eighty-nine conservative people seldom form radical new habits, and old John wore his "Sunday suit" of black broadcloth to the Amberson ball. The coat was square, with skirts to the knees; old John called it a "Prince Albert" and was well enough pleased with it, but his great-nephew considered it the next thing to an insult.

The large room had filled, and so had the broad hall and the rooms on the other side of the hall, where there were tables for whist. The imported orchestra waited in the ballroom on the third floor, but a local harp, cello, violin and flute were playing airs from "The Fencing Master" in the hall, and people were shouting over the music. Old John Minifer's voice was louder and more penetrating than any other, because he had been troubled with deafness for twenty-five years, heard his own voice but faintly, and liked to hear it. "Smell of flowers like this always puts me in mind of funerals," he kept telling his niece, Fanny Minifer, who was with him; and he seemed to get a great deal of satisfaction out of this reminder. His treasured yet strident voice cut through the voluminous sound that filled the room, and he was heard everywhere.

Presently George's mortification was increased to hear this sawmill droning harshly from the midst of the thickening crowd: "Ain't the dancin' broke out yet, Fanny? Hoopla! Let's push through and go see the young women folks crack their heels! Start the circus! Hoopsey-daisy!" Miss Fanny Minifer, in charge of the lively veteran, was almost as distressed as her nephew George, but she did her duty and managed to get old John through the press and out to the broad stairway, which numbers of young people were now ascending to the ballroom. George began to recover from the degradation into which this relic of early settler days had dragged him. What restored him completely was a dark-eyed little beauty of nineteen, very knowing in lustrous blue and jet; at sight of this dashing advent in the line of guests before him George was fully an Amberson again.

"Remember you very well indeed!" he said, his graciousness more earnest than any he had heretofore displayed. Isabel heard him and laughed, "But you don't, George!" she said. "You don't remember her yet, thought of course you will!" Miss Morgan is from out of town, and I'm afraid this is the first time you've ever seen her."

"You Don't Remember Her Yet, Though of Course You Will!" You might take her up to the dancing; I think you've pretty well done your duty here."

"Be delighted," George responded formally, and offered his arm, not with a flourish, certainly, but with an impressiveness inspired partly by the appearance of the person to whom he offered it, partly by his being the hero of this fête, and partly by his youthfulness, for when manners are new they are apt to be elaborate. The little beauty intrusted her gloved fingers to his coat sleeve, and they moved away together.

As he conducted Miss Morgan through the hall toward the stairway they passed the open double doors of a cardroom, where some squadrons of older people were preparing for action, and, leaning gracefully upon the mantelpiece of this room, a tall man, handsome, high-mannered and sparklingly point-device, held laughing converse with that queer-looking duck, the Sharon girls' uncle. The tall gentleman waved a gracious salutation to George, and Miss Morgan's curiosity was stirred: "Who is that?" "I didn't catch his name when my mother presented him to me," said George. "You mean the queer-looking duck?" "I mean the aristocratic duck."

"That's my Uncle George. Honorable George Amberson. I thought everybody knew him."

"He looks as though everybody ought to know him," she said. "It seems to run in your family."

If she had any sly intention it skipped over George harmlessly. "Well, of course, I suppose most everybody does," he admitted—"but in this part of the country especially. Besides Uncle George is in congress; the family like to have someone there."

"Why?"

"Well, it's sort of a good thing in one way. For instance, Uncle Sydney Amberson and his wife, Aunt Amelia, they haven't much of anything to do with themselves—get bored to death around here, of course. Well, probably Uncle George'll have Uncle Sydney appointed minister or ambassador or something like that, to Russia or Italy or somewhere, and that'll make it pleasant when any of the rest of the family go traveling, or things like that. I expect to do a good deal of traveling myself when I get out of college."

Sydney was an Amberson exaggerated—more pompous than gracious; too portly, flushed, starched to a shine, his stately jaw furnished with an Edward the Seventh beard. Amelia, likewise full-bodied, showed glittering blond hair exuberantly dressed; a pink, fat face cold under a white-hot tiara; a solid, cold bosom under a white-hot necktie; great, cold, gloved arms, and the rest of her beautifully upholstered. As George ascended the broad stairway they were precisely the aunt and uncle he was most pleased to point out to a girl from out of town, as this appearance in the way of relatives. At sight of them the grandeur of the Amberson family was instantly conspicuous as a permanent thing: it was impossible to doubt that the Ambersons were entrenched, in their nobility and riches, behind polished and glittering barriers which were as solid as they were brilliant, and would last.

CHAPTER IV.

The hero of the fête, with the dark-eyed little beauty upon his arm, reached the top of the second flight of stairs; and here, beyond a spacious landing, where two proud-like darkies tended a crystalline punch bowl, four wide archways in a rose-vine lattice framed gliding silhouettes of waiters, already smoothly at it to the castanets of "La Paloma." evidently surprised, was in the act of leaving these delights escorted by a middle-aged man of commonplace appearance. The escort had a dry, lined face upon which, not ornamentally but as a matter of course, there grew a business man's short mustache; and his thin neck showed an Adam's apple, but not conspicuously, for there was nothing conspicuous about him. Baldish, dim, quiet, he was an unnoticeable part of this festival, and although there were a dozen or more middle-aged men present, not casually to be distinguished from him in general aspect, he was probably the last person in the big house at whom a stranger would have glanced twice. It did not enter George's mind to mention to Miss Morgan that this was his father, or to say anything whatever about him.

Mr. Minifer strook his son's hand unobtrusively in passing. "I'll take Uncle John home," he said in a low voice. "Then I guess I'll go on home myself—I'm not a great hand at parties, you know. Good night, George."

Dinner Stories

A hunter more boastful than successful joined a bear hunting expedition. During the hunt, as this man was resting by the side of a rock and talking with another, he remarked: "If there's anything I dote on, it's bear. A slice of bear steak nicely done is just perfect!"

"Well," said his companion, looking up, "I'm hanged if there isn't a bear now!"

"The man who 'doted on bear'?"

Looking up, saw an immense grizzly standing on the top of the rock, gave a yell and leaped into the woods and disappeared. His companion soon overtook him and said to the fugitive as he came up: "You liked bear?"

"Well, I do," said the runaway; "but that one ain't done enough."

A colonel of a colored regiment coming in about 10:30 o'clock was duly challenged by the sentry and responded: "Colonel — officer of the camp."

The sentry tried his best to pierce the darkness, gave it up, and finally said: "Look 'eah, man, yo-all ah de fo'th man, what's done tried to make me think he's Chunnel. Go away wid dat stuff."

The colonel pretty warmly reaffirmed that he was Colonel, and demanded immediate admission. The guard, unabashed, told him to step out so that he could see him. The colonel walked up to him in a race, and you can imagine his consternation when the sentry took hold of the silver eagle on his shoulder, looked at him with a grin on his face and said: "Oh, Lawdy! 'Tis de ole bird, ain't it?"

STOWAWAYS LEAD ELLIS ISLAND OFFICIALS MERRY LIFE

New York.—Out at Ellis Island, the portal to America, through which Europe has been wont in years past to pour her hordes into the New World there are "a gang of human hyenas," according to officials. The "gang" consists of some two dozen youths, of every nationality, who have stowed away on American troopships returning from abroad, and who are now awaiting the decision of Uncle Sam as to what will become of them. Elsie Janis, the actress, solved the problem for young Mike, Cudd, by adopting him. Mike has lots of friends still at the island who are not so lucky.

"They're not bad," said the official in charge. "But frisky! Oh, boy! They plan one day to skip before the mast on treasure ships and the next day they're bound for Mexico to fight with Villa. They got me damn near crazy, and that's the truth," he confessed.

THIN, NERVOUS PEOPLE NEED BITRO-PHOSPHATE

What It Is and How It Increases Weight, Strength and Nerve Force In Many Instances

SHOULD BE PRESCRIBED BY EVERY DOCTOR AND USED IN EVERY HOSPITAL

Says Editor of "Physicians' Who's Who."

Take plain bitro-phosphate is the advice of these physicians to thin, nervous people who lack vim, energy and nerve force, and there seems to be ample proof of the efficacy of this preparation to warrant the recommendation. Moreover, it is a judge from the countless preparations and treatments which are continually being advertised for the purpose of making thin people fleshy, developing arms, neck and bust, and rosy cheeks, and healthy and happy, there are evidences of men and women who keenly feel their excessive thinness. Thinness and weakness are often due to starved nerves. Our bodies need more phosphate than is contained in modern foods. Physicians claim there is nothing that will supply this deficiency so well as the organic phosphate, known among druggists as bitro-phosphate, which is inexpensive and is sold by Smith Drug Co., Janesville, and most all druggists under a guarantee of satisfaction or money back. By feeding the nerves directly and by supplying the body cells with the necessary phosphoric food elements bitro-phosphate should produce a welcome transformation in the appearance, and increase in weight frequently by 10 to 20 pounds.

Clinical tests made in St. Catherine's Hospital, N. Y. C., showed that two patients, respectively, through the administration of organic phosphate, both patients claim they have not felt as strong and well for the past twelve years.

Increase in weight also carries with it a general improvement in the health. Nervousness, sleeplessness and lack of energy, which nearly always accompany excessive thinness, should soon disappear, dull eyes ought to brighten and pale cheeks glow with the bloom of perfect health.

Physicians and hospitals everywhere are now recognizing its merits by its use in increasing quantities. Frederick Kelle, M. D., editor of New York Physicians' "Who's Who," says: "Bitro-phosphate should be prescribed by every doctor and used in every hospital to increase strength and nerve force and to enrich the blood."

Joseph D. Harrigan, Former Visiting Specialist to North Eastern Dispensary, says: "Let those who are weak, thin, nervous, anemic, or run-down, take a natural, unadulterated substance such as bitro-phosphate and you will soon see some astonishing results in the increase of nerve energy, strength of body and mind and power of endurance."

Bitro-phosphate is made entirely of the organic phosphate compound referred to in the National Standard Dispensary as being an excellent tonic and nerve and a preparation which has recently acquired considerable reputation in the treatment of neurasthenia. The standard of excellence strength and purity of its substance is beyond question, for every Bitro-phosphate tablet is manufactured in strict accordance with the U. S. Pharmacopoeia test requirement. Bitro-phosphate is therefore not a patent medicine and should not be confused with any of the secret nostrums, so-called tonics or widely advertised "cure-alls."

CAUTION.—Although Bitro-phosphate is unsurpassed for relieving nervousness, sleeplessness and general weakness, owing to its tendency to increase weight, it should not be used by anyone who does not desire to put on flesh.

Girl He Left Behind Sues for Balm When He Brings Back French Bride

CHICAGO—The story told by Miss Wanda Drewes, a girl who has filed a $25,000 breach of promise suit against Fred A. Leach, wealthy farmer of Morris, just returned from service in the A. E. F., is rich with romance, love letters, a French war bride, a mother said to be disappointed in her son's choice and a broken hearted Chicago girl.

The girl—Miss Drewes—her arms heavily laden with 448 burning love letters, walked deliberately, but stilling a sob, into Attorney Erbstein's office recently.

They met at Parry. "I met Leach three years ago at a party," she said. "We had dates and dates. I liked, admired, and finally loved him. One night he told me of his farm, of his contentment and tranquility of the country life and he slipped a diamond on my finger. 'You have the ring,' asked the attorney. The girl raised her hand. 'Then came the parades, the crashing of the bands, and he went away to war. He wrote every day and promised to come back again that little country home, with the rambling roses.'"

Here she handed Mr. Erbstein the letters—448—count 'em—and went on. "I loved that man more than anything else in the world. I do now. His mother loved me. Finally he said he was coming home. Then there was an interval of three months. I was invited to his mother's house on the Fourth, thinking he still was in France."

Leaves of French Bride. "The day before the Fourth, I received a letter from her saying Fred was home with a French bride—a woman who had nursed him in France. 'I could have killed her,' he hadn't written, hadn't breathed a word of it to me. I love him—love him—ah, but it's no use now." Attorney Erbstein unwrapped the package of letters. Some of them spoke of the war, told how Leach had a horse killed under him, told of a trip over the "lines" in a huge bombing plane, and all told of his love for Wanda.

Miss Wanda Drewes.

Read— "My dearest, darling Wanda—I am homesick for the girl I left behind. Now, my dear, in regard to taking up with some girl over here, there's nothing to it. I never have been with another girl since I left you—I have been true and always will be. "I don't think much of the French girls. Any young man is a darn fool who would take up with them. The good old U. S. A. has the best class of girls, and I can see no reason for loving a French girl. If I was to stay here 20 years I would never be seen with one. "Dear, I love you so—I am your true and loving kid. "Corp. Fred A. Leach."

Again: "Dearest—I was awake late last night dreaming of you. You certainly have been a kind and loving sweetheart and I meant what I said when I told you I loved you. Some of the boys have married French girls, but there is only one for me, and that is you. "Longing for You. "Another: "Dearest Darling Wanda: The work is harder, the war more terrible, and the only sunshine I have is your letters. Dearest girl, I want a home, and I am longing to get back to the girl I left on the other shore."

The Story of Orange-Crush

Interesting Facts About the Preparation of "the Drink Irresistible"

THE process of preparing Orange-Crush was perfected in Los Angeles—in the midst of the beautiful orange-groves of Southern California. It took many years of investigation and experimenting before the drink you now know was produced.

Difficulty of Preserving Orange-Juice

The almost insurmountable difficulty which had to be faced at the start was the quick deterioration of orange-juice. The fresh juice, it was found, could be preserved only by keeping it at a temperature of 18 degrees below freezing point. Sterilizing the juice greatly injured the fresh delicate flavor, and even the sterilized juice continued to deteriorate unless kept at a temperature of from one to three degrees above freezing point.

Studies of the U. S. Department of Agriculture on Orange-Juice

The difficulties in preserving orange-juice are summed up in Bulletin No. 241, issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, which, under Dr. Carl L. Alsberg, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, conducted a series of studies on the methods of preparing and preserving fruit juices. This statement appears on page 17:

"The studies on orange juice have not led to results on which a method for its preparation may be based, as no way to successfully retain fresh orange flavor has been found. Sterilizing the juice injures the flavor, which continues to deteriorate gradually when the juice is kept at ordinary temperatures."

Where Orange-Juice gets its Flavor

Long ago it was found that the dominant flavor in fresh orange-juice was present also in the fresh, golden outer skin of the orange in the form of tiny, fragrant globules of oil artfully concealed in minute cells. These globules, it was found, could be preserved without flavor deterioration. The presence of a small amount of this delicious oil in combination with natural sugar, citric acid and water, give orange-juice the rare flavor of which it is justly famous.

What Orange-Crush Is

Orange-Crush is simply a skillful blend of these delicately flavored globules of oil,

It is the presence of these minute and delicious particles of oil, distributed by the Ward process uniformly throughout the drink which gives the inimitable flavor and the fruit-cloudy appearance to Orange-Crush.

In the Heart of the Orange Country

The gathering of the fragrant globules of oil from the oranges is done by experts in the heart of the orange country where the choicest oranges in the world grow. Gentle pressing causes the cells to break open and exude their lucious content. It takes millions of oranges to supply the pure fruit oil now used each year in preparing Orange-Crush.

The Fruit Acid

Every ordinary size glass or bottle of Orange-Crush contains approximately the same amount of purest citric acid that is found in an ordinary ripe orange. It is this remarkable, refrigerant acid which gives the delightful tartness to oranges, lemons, grape-fruit and other members of the citrus family. The citric acid in Orange-Crush is obtained from these fruits. It is both delightful to the taste and extremely beneficial to the human body, as any physician will tell you.

PERHAPS you have wondered where Orange-Crush gets its pleasing flavor and the delicate fragrance of the fruit we know and like the best—golden oranges.

Perhaps you have been surprised that Orange-Crush could be served to you at such a reasonable price when oranges cost from 50c to $1 a dozen.

If so, you will be interested in reading the story of this delightful drink and learning the reasons for its flavor, deliciousness, purity and quality.

pressed from the outer skin of fresh oranges, purest sugar, citric acid (the natural acid of the orange), water and a small amount of harmless coloring. Sterilizing, which would injure the flavor, is unnecessary, as the sugar in the concentrated sirup which is delivered to bottlers and soda fountains, is, in itself, a preservative sufficient to prevent deterioration in any climate. No preservative except the sugar is used.

The Exclusive Orange-Crush Process

It was only after many patient years of experimenting that the exclusive process, whereby the delicately flavored globules of oil are successfully introduced into the drink, was achieved. The discovery and perfection of this remarkable process was accomplished by N. C. Ward, a soft-drink chemist of national repute. The process is known and used only by Orange-Crush Co.

Wholesomeness of Carbonated Water

As a rule, Orange-Crush is served cold and sparkling with carbonated water. The carbonation is accomplished by the impregnation of the liquid with carbon dioxide gas, which adds to the wholesomeness and deliciousness of the drink. Dr. W. W. Skinner of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, in an official article recently published on the Composition of Bottled Soft Drinks, says:

"Carbon dioxide gas in bottled soda water is a wholesome product, identical with the carbon dioxide which occurs naturally in large quantities in certain mineral springs in the United States. Springs of this type are highly prized for their effervescent properties."

Drink Orange-Crush Often!

Wherever you drink Orange-Crush, you can always be sure it is pure, delicious and wholesome. Be sure to drink it several times every day. You will be refreshed, delighted and benefitted.

JANESVILLE READY FOR BIG GAME

By George McManus.

LOCAL TEAM WILL PLAY FOOTVILLE

Manager Jimmy Murphy of the Lawrence Lunch team has returned after visiting in Chicago watching the White Sox in a state-of-the-art game today he said that the same lineup that defeated the Fairville team on last Sunday would again take the field against the villagers at the Fair Grounds next Sunday for the third and deciding game of the season.

Manager Murphy is confident that his team can again take the Footville aggregation into camp and he emphatically denied this morning that he was looking for new players while he was in Chicago. "I simply went down there to watch the Sox perform and I have no idea of making any changes in the present line-up," Murphy said. In the game next Sunday has already attracted the attention of local fans and according to early indications the park will be filled to capacity when the game starts.

Local fans who have complained of the diamond at the Fair Grounds will not have any complaint on Sunday as the infield is to be rolled and leveled according to Manager Murphy. He will take a crew of men to the park tomorrow morning to work on the diamond.

Manager Silverthorn has informed the Jane manager that no shifts will be made in the Footville lineup with the exception of a possible shift at second base. Manager Silverthorn like Murphy firmly believes that his team cannot be beaten by any nine in Janesville and some of the Footville players are coming to Janesville next Sunday with their pockets full of good American currency to wager on their boys.

Not since the Lakota Cardinals played basketball against the Footville team last year has such an interest been manifested about the city. Wherever the sporting fraternity congregates the man are forgetting the big league races for a time and discussing the chances of the Janesville team to cop from Footville. The local team will have plenty of backers when they take the field on Sunday and the men of Footville who are coming prepared to back their team with American dollars will find lots of takers before the game.

With Sam Lennquist on the mound for Janesville there is no doubt that ball fun in Janesville will not be a few shakels on the local nine. Sam has demonstrated beyond all doubt that he can pitch back and the fans here believe that Footville will not have a chance.

Weber, the Belleville lad, who has been engaged by the villagers, will season will oppose Lennquist and while Weber is a mighty good man the Janes had little trouble finding him for some hits last Sunday.

"Bud" Gorman, the Madison boy who claims he has robbed a three last Sunday will again appear in a Jane uniform. Gorman is a powerful hitter and he claims he is going to hit one in the country that will outdistance his foul last Sunday and it is going to be fair.

Umpire Libby will undoubtedly officiate behind the bat. Manager Murphy has sought the services of a Janesville man but no word has been received from him. If Libby refuses to officiate, undoubtedly a Madison man will be engaged.

The game on Sunday will be more than an ordinary baseball game. It will be a battle between two ancient rivals and local fans are aware of the many battles staged in the past between Janesville and Footville baseball teams.

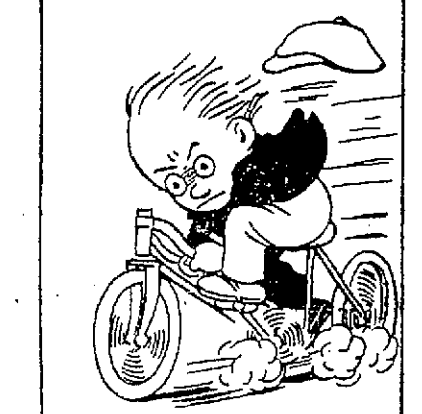

Footville despite the fact that it is a village has always been represented by a winning baseball team. The rivalry between the two teams is intense and very few fights have taken place during the past series to mar the games. Last Sunday Manager Silverthorn in the heat of the game became excited and walloped Tommy Croake.

The fight was stopped at once and the Silverthorn admitted that he completely lost his head in the excitement. What will be the outcome of Sunday's game is not known and undoubtedly Ring Lardner is the only man in the country that would be able to pick a winner.

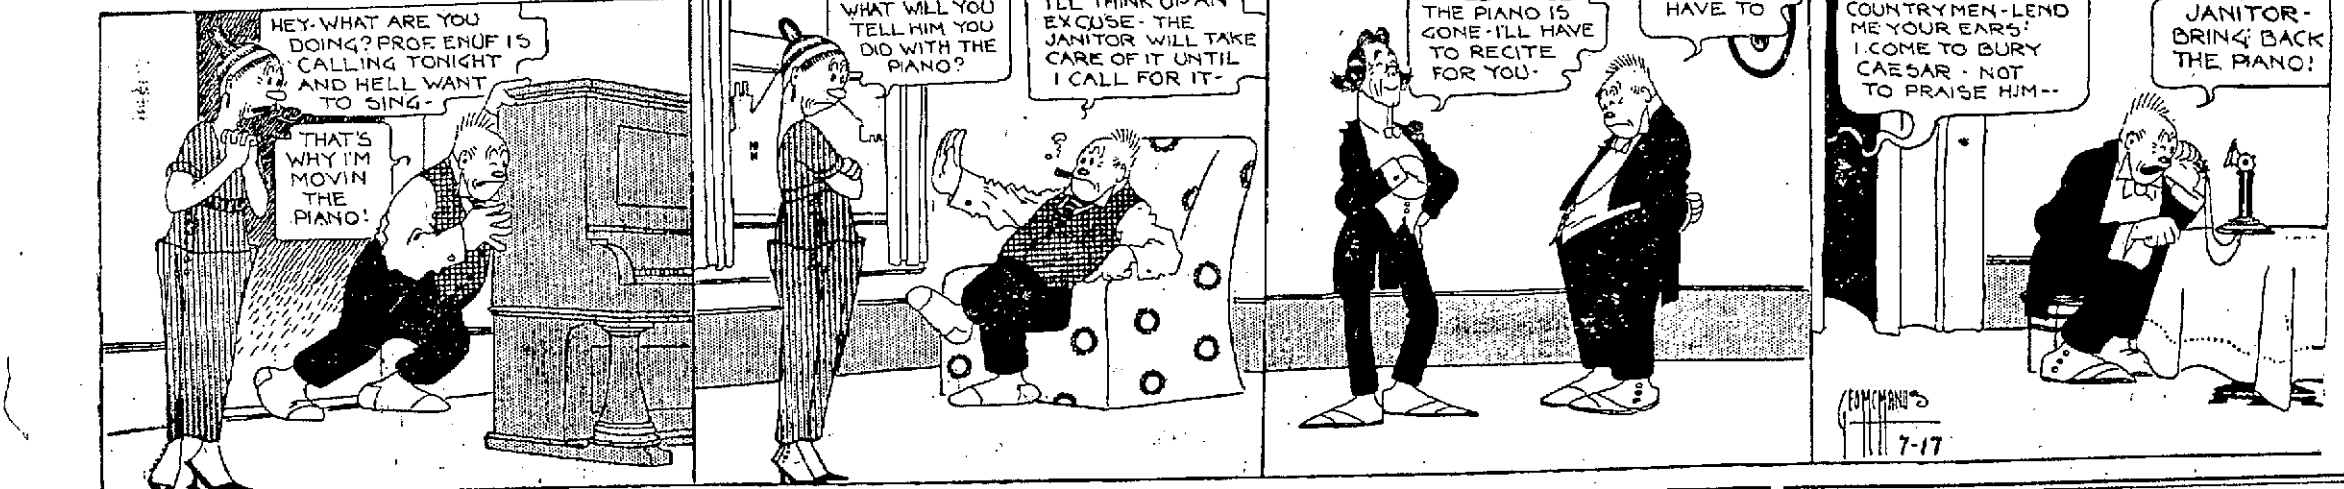

One thing is certain however and that is that the Janes are going to take the field prepared to fight until the last man is down for a victory. Manager Murphy after weeks of drilling has instilled the fighting spirit in the men and the fans realize that the Janes are never defeated until the last man is out.

SPORT SNAP-SHOTS

BY JACK KEENE.

Benny Kauff, during a recent trip to Cincinnati, met the man to whom a major portion of the credit is due for the rise of the Pomeroy slugger in baseball. Boyd Chambers, now athletic trainer of the University of Cincinnati, is the man.

Some years ago Kauff and Chambers were team-mates on the Parkersburg club of a West Virginia bush league. One day the promoters of the club, discouraged at their failure to reap a fortune, withdrew their support and the players, most of them jobs they had held. Benny hit the trail to the coal mines, whence he had sprung to baseball. Chambers, however, refused to give up hope and finally induced the most prosperous of the club's erstwhile supporters to again consider the proposition. This the promoters consented to do on condition that Chambers could round up the widely scattered players and would accept the management of the club.

"Most of the boys wanted some sort of a financial guarantee before they would return," says Chambers. "but when I interviewed Benny all he asked was, 'May I pitch if I go back?' I told him he might, for in those days I thought he was a pretty good pitcher. So Benny Kauff came back to baseball and I am glad that I was instrumental in bringing him back, for if he hadn't broke as they say Benny, who was plumb discouraged all the time, probably would have stuck to his job in the mines and forgotten about baseball."

Although the Yankees are playing first place ball the never-contented New York fans are kicking. A Gotham sport scribe says: "The demand for greater speed in the playing of games by the New York Yankees is fast becoming general."

"MIRACLE MAN" HAS COME BACK AGAIN

New York, July 16.—The "miracle man" of 1915 has come back. Pat Moran, the slight manager, is making a strong bid for the flag. Only a few weeks months ago, Moran was out of a job. The Phillies released him unconditionally after he had won a pennant and made two second place finishes for them. Today, he is the most talked of manager in the major leagues.

Taking the reins at Cincinnati just before the training season opened, the man who has a reputation for moiling winning ball clubs out of misfit material has come into his own again.

SCHUPP TRADED TO CARDS FOR SNYDER

New York, July 17.—Ferdinand M. Schupp, pitcher of the New York Giants, was traded today to the St. Louis Nationals in exchange for Catcher Frank Snyder. Schupp was one of the most promising of the younger pitchers of the National league before he quitted the army, but since his discharge has been unable to regain the control which made his work so effective.

HIS PLAYING AIDS NEW YORK IN RACE

The heavy hitting and spectacular fielding of George Burns is one of the main reasons why the Giants are leading the National circuit. He is batting over .300 and his fast fielding has been one of the bright spots in the club's defense.

Liberty League Votes Wet.
Appel—Following a drastic scoring of prohibition by S. X. Nistleroy of Cumberland, the Wisconsin Liberty league Tuesday passed a resolution that war-time prohibition be lifted and that the enactment of the government prohibition on January 16 be altered to permit the sale of light wine and 3 percent beer. Copies of the resolution were forwarded to Washington.

Tagging the Bags

The Yanks lost six straight games in Cleveland and Detroit before George Moberg broke the clubs losing streak by winning the second half of a double header from the Tigers. A pitching his first game since the middle of June, Grover Alexander held the Braves to seven hits and the Cubs won.

Rain and threatening weather caused three postponements in the National league. A double by Centerfielder Burrus of the Mackmen drove over the tying and winning runs for Philadelphia in their game against the Browns. Cicotte had the better of James in a pitching duel at Chicago and the White Sox tightened up their hold on first place at the expense of the Red Sox.

Walt Johnson blanked the Indians yesterday, allowing eight hits, but keeping them scattered. He helped win his own game with a triple. Roger Bresnahan is manager of the Toledo club again. Roger may return to the game as a catcher also. The Phillies have acquired Catcher Trappesser from Boston by the waiver route.

All Tennis Players Get into Action in Tourney

Chicago, July 17.—Every tennis player in the running in the ninth annual national championship tournament on clay courts, will get into action this afternoon. A full program is scheduled with men's singles in the sixth round and the winners to qualify for the semi-finals, men's doubles in advanced rounds, women's singles, players competing in early round eliminations and women's and mixed doubles contests to begin.

Post Honors Hero.

Wausau.—The Wausau post of the American legion has been named the Talbot Montgomery post, in memory of Lieut. Frank Talbot Montgomery, who, although mortally wounded at Nois de la Naza, Argonne Forest, refused to be evacuated until he had given orders for the carrying out of a mission to which his machine gun company had been assigned. With a small detachment and one other officer, he went into an exposed position to beat down enemy fire so that infantry might advance. The commandant was killed and Lieutenant Montgomery seriously wounded. He displayed exceptional devotion to duty and was cited for the fine example set by him.

WALWORTH COUNTY HIGH IN CORN CROP

Lake Geneva, July 15.—With a crop estimated at 59,840 bushels, Walworth county ranks as the sixth county in the state in the 1919 records of corn production. The yield is an increase of 2,320 bushels over that of last year, and places Walworth in the lead of the six southeastern counties. The condition of the corn is 95 percent of normal.

Other estimates of the state department of agriculture show that the county will have the largest timothy and clover mixed hay crop in southeastern Wisconsin. The forecasted yield is 24,240 tons, compared with 21,340 tons for Waushara county and 14,300 tons for Racine county.

Potato production in the county will remain the same as last year, with a yield of 2,390 bushels. Of the small grains, the rice crop is in the best condition, 96 per cent of normal.

Having harvested a hay crop that has bulked out every barn in the county, farmers are now turning their attention to harvesting grain. Rice and barley are already being cut, and the click of the binder will be heard in the wheat fields next week. It is estimated that 2.5 percent of the crop of wheat, of 5,240 bushels, is still held on farms of the county.

You May Be Absolutely Satisfied with Wadhams 27c Gasoline--but Wadhams Does'nt Want You to be

WADHAMS has never compromised on quality. It has maintained quality, preached quality, fought for quality, staked its reputation and its future on quality.

As far as Wadhams is concerned, there can be not the slightest deviation from this ideal. That is the reason, and the only reason, why these statements are being made—to acquaint the present users of Wadhams 27c grade with the superiority, over any other gasoline on the market, of

True Gasoline
Wadhams 30+
cents

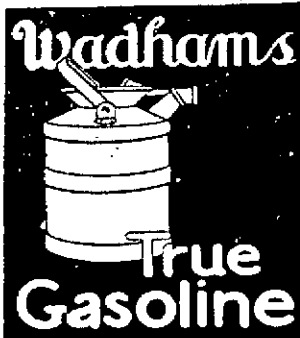

It may seem a small matter to quibble about, especially as the Wadhams 27c grade is a quality product, a True gasoline, and has been accepted as such by every local motorist who has tried it. There is no motor fuel of similar price that equals it in quality.

But it CANNOT be as good as the 30c grade. The three cents difference in price may seem trifling, but it is the exact margin that allows for the very highest possible refinement, the utmost power per gallon, a degree of satisfaction-giving qualities that you will find in no other gasoline.

There will be no cut in the quality of Wadhams lower priced gasoline. It will remain as it is—the best motor fuel obtainable at the price. But we earnestly recommend the greater satisfaction and the ultimate economy to be gained by the exclusive use of Wadhams True Gasoline—30c per gallon.

If your garage man does not display this "SIGN OF THE RED CAN" telephone to our Janesville wholesale distributing station (Franklin St. and Western Ave.)
